The K&R Writers Series is led and supported by senior faculty from multiple disciplines with extensive experience in successful research grant writing.

- Each participant will be paired with a faculty member who will provide written feedback throughout the program.
- Didactic materials and writing assignments provided prior to each session.
- Small group activities for additional guidance.

The program will culminate in a mock study section simulating the review process where participants will receive feedback on their applications.

By the end of the program, your proposal should be in a format that is nearly ready for submission.

Requirements

- Be early career faculty or senior-level post-doctoral fellow* who is planning to submit or re-submit a K, R, or foundation grant application in fall 2022 or spring 2023.
- Provide a letter of commitment from a scientific mentor who will support the proposal development throughout the program.
- Submit a current CV, a draft Specific Aims page or a 1-page outline of the proposed research project, and a 1-page outline of the approach section (research strategy).
- Commit to attending at least 80% of required sessions and complete relevant grant application assignments.
  (2 sessions are for K writers only)

*Consideration will be given to senior-level post-doctoral fellows eligible for K99/R00 or similar grants specifically for transition to faculty on a case-by-case basis and dependent upon capacity.
