

K&R Writers Series

- 5-month grant writing program
- Step-by-step instruction
- Personalized feedback
- Disciplined approach to the development of your K or R grant application

Who Should Attend

If you are planning to submit or resubmit a K, R, or foundation grant application between fall 2023 and spring 2024, you should attend!

Sessions will be held virtually.

The K&R Writers Series is led and supported by senior faculty from multiple disciplines with extensive experience in successful research grant writing.

- Each participant will be paired with a faculty member who will provide written feedback throughout the series.
- Didactic materials and writing assignments provided prior to each session.
- Small group activities for additional guidance.

The program will culminate in a mock study section simulating the review process where participants will receive feedback on their applications.

By the end of the program, your proposal should be in a format that is nearly ready for submission.

Requirements

Each applicant for this intensive grant writing program needs to:

- Be an early career faculty or senior-level post-doctoral fellow* who is planning to submit or resubmit a K, R, or foundation grant application in fall 2023 or spring 2024.
- Have already identify a funding mechanism with help from your primary scientific mentor and verified your eligibility.
- Provide a letter of commitment from your primary scientific mentor who will review your proposal assignments throughout the series.
- Submit: current CV, draft Biosketch, draft Specific Aims page or a 1-page outline of the proposed research project, and a 1-page outline of the approach section (research strategy).
- Commit to attending at least 80% of required sessions and complete all relevant grant application assignments.

*Consideration will be given to senior-level post-doctoral fellows eligible for K99/R00 or similar grants specifically for transition to faculty on a case-by-case basis and dependent upon capacity.
