

Lindsay Strowd, MD # 14

Lindsay Strowd is an Assistant Professor and Vice Chair of Dermatology at Wake Forest University School of Medicine. Her current clinical interests include complex medical dermatology, inpatient dermatology, and cutaneous lymphoma. She is actively involved in teaching the dermatology residents billing, coding and patient safety curricula, and teaches within the medical school. She is a Clinical Skills facilitator and is Course Director for the dermatology thread. She has received the Brooks Scholarship in medical education research which has allowed her to conduct research looking at student predictors of medical school success.